Chambers' Encyclopædia.

Being a beautiful, clear reprint of the Edinburgh and London Edition of Chambers' Encyclopædia, a library of Universal knowledge for the people, with very large additions upon topics of special interest to American Readers, and giving American statistics of population down to and including the census of 1890.

REMEMBER, this great Encyclopædia contains thousands upon thousands of articles, embracing all subjects within the limits of human knowledge; yet, in its more than 27,000 specially prepared articles, while giving pointed, practical, explicit and most interesting and instructive information both for the student and the general reader, are free from ambiguous technicalities and comparatively void of the mass of scientific signs, symbols and foreign nomenclature which crowd the pages of most other cyclopedias prepared for scientific and professional use alone. The Philadelphia Press well says:

"The particular and unique value of the Encyclopædia is its happy solution of the problem of fullness and convenience. It is neither bulky or superficial. It is the book of reference for the million."

Chambers' Encyclopædia has always occupied a front place among the cyclopedic works to be coveted.

Evolution of the Negligé Shirt.

When the negligé shirt first became popular, says the Philadelphia Record, it was a flannel or silk shirt with a soft collar and no cuffs to speak of. Its object was to relieve a man of wearing starched bosoms and collars and cuffs in hot weather, when they are not only uncomfortable but likely to wilt down from perspiration and give the wearer a slovenly appearance. Now, however, the only difference is found in the color. The negligé shirt is as stiff as a board and the collar even stiffer; so are the cuffs. In fact it isn't negligé at all. The same thing applies to the russet shoe. When it first came out its chief advantage lay in the assertion that it wasn't necessary to have it shined every day or so. Some one, however, had to invent a patent polish for the negligé shoe, and it costs more to shine than it does a regular black shoe.
